

Drunk Driving Video Transcript

I can tell you a little bit about the dangers of drunk driving because when I was 11, my father, who is an alcoholic and a drug addict, took me on a camping trip with him. He was very inebriated at the time.

On the way home, he was arrested for a DUI. He almost crashed multiple times.

I'm very fortunate that I didn't end up getting into an accident on that day.

Unfortunately, this wasn't the last time that my father drove while under the influence of drugs with me in the car.

Needless to say, I don't have much of a relationship with him anymore.

If you're a teenager and you use alcohol, I want you to keep in mind the effect that your drug use is going to have on other people.

Drunk driving is incredibly dangerous not just because you're endangering yourself, but because you're endangering people around you. You're hurting your family members, your friends that you may be driving with, and of course, random people on the road that may encounter you while you're inebriated.

Even if you get lucky and never get into an accident that hurts anyone, you're still going to sever the relationships you have with your loved ones.

It's too late for people like my father to repair the relationship he has with his family. Don't do the same.
